The Author

Arthur Conan Doyle was born in Edinburgh in 1859. He studied medicine and was a doctor before he became a writer in 1891. Conan Doyle created the famous fictional detective, Sherlock Holmes.

When Conan Doyle wrote a Sherlock Holmes story, he started at the end of the mystery and worked back from there. He wrote his first Sherlock Holmes story – A Study in Scarlet – in three weeks. It introduced the characters of Holmes and his friend, Dr Watson. They appeared in 56 short stories and four novels. Conan Doyle gave Holmes a London address – 221B Baker Street. Even today, tourists come to Baker Street to look for this house, even though Sherlock Holmes is a character in a book and was not a real person. In 1893 Conan Doyle ‘killed’ Holmes in the The Final Problem. But everyone wanted more stories about Sherlock Holmes so he wrote a new story – The Hound of the Baskervilles, in 1902. King Edward VII knighted Conan Doyle and he became ‘Sir’ Arthur Conan Doyle. He died in 1930.

The story

Narrator This is the beginning of the story. One morning, Sherlock Holmes and his friend, Dr Watson, are standing in an upstairs room in the house of the famous detective. Dr Watson is looking out of the window...

Dr Watson Holmes, come over here to the window. There’s a very strange man in the street below. Look. He’s down there in the snow.

Holmes I can see him. How old do you think he is?

Dr Watson He’s about fifty … He’s tall, fat...

Holmes Yes, that long black coat is very expensive. He’s a rich man.

Dr Watson He’s rich, but he’s worried.

Holmes You’re right. Look how he moves his head from side to side. Look how he moves his hands up and down.

Dr Watson What’s wrong with him? He’s looking at the numbers on all the houses.

Holmes Watson, I think he’s coming here.

Dr Watson Here?

Holmes Yes. He’s very unhappy about something and I think he wants me to help him.

Dr Watson You’re right. He’s stopping at our front door.

Holmes There, I told you, Watson. He’s here to see me...

Maid Mr Holder to see you, sir.

Holmes Please sit down. You’d like to tell us your story—is that right?

Mr Holder Yes, I–, I–er...

Holmes We can wait a minute. When you are ready, we can begin.

Mr Holder I look very strange, I know.

Holmes No, no, no, you want to tell us something important, that’s all.

Mr Holder Why did this happen to me? It’s the worst thing … the very worst.

Holmes Please tell me your name, sir, and then you can tell me your story.

Mr Holder Perhaps you know my name. I am Alexander Holder of the Holder and Stevenson Bank of Threadneedle Street.

Holmes Ah yes, one of the oldest banks in London.

Mr Holder I’m sorry, sir. They told me about you and said, ‘You must speak to Sherlock Holmes. He can help you.’ I came to see you at once. I ran from Baker Street Station to get here more quickly. Thank you for waiting. I am ready to begin now.

Dr Watson We are listening!
Mr Holder: Yesterday morning I was in my office at the bank when a man came to see me. When I saw him, I was very surprised. He was a very famous man.

Dr Watson: Who was it?

Mr Holder: I’m sorry, but I can’t tell you his name—because he’s one of the British royal family. ‘Mr Holder,’ he said, ‘people come to you to borrow money, I hear.’ ‘Yes, they do,’ I said, ‘and we always give it to them when we can.’ ‘I see,’ said the man. ‘Well, I need to borrow £50,000 from you at once.’

Holmes: That’s a very large sum of money! But you said he’s one of the royal family.

Mr Holder: Indeed. He said, ‘I can borrow that money many times over from my friends, of course. But I wanted to come to a bank for it. It’s not good to borrow from friends. After you give the money back to them, they always think they can ask you for things.’

Dr Watson: How long did he want to keep the money?

Mr Holder: For six days. He told me, ‘Someone is going to give me a lot of money on Monday, so I can give back the £50,000 to you then. But I need the money now.’

Holmes: Did you ask for anything in return?

Mr Holder: Yes. I told him, ‘For the bank to give you £50,000, you need to leave something expensive with us.’ The man then took out a big black box and put it on the table. Do you know the Emerald Crown?

Dr Watson: It’s one of the most famous crowns in England.

Mr Holder: Exactly. He took the Emerald Crown out of the box. It’s gold with 39 large emeralds—all of the most beautiful colour. I was unhappy about leaving the crown at the bank. So I took it home with me. Last night I lost everything: the emeralds, my son, and my good name. You must help me to get them back.
